On the upper east side of Manhattan, one of the most valuable real estate, just steps from Central Park, at number 807 of the famous Park Avenue, there is a very special building. 12 floors, 27 rooms in total, 16 bathrooms totaling over 2,200 square metres, divided into three large super luxury apartments within which resided several celebs. Starting with the rap star Puff Daddy, born Sean Combs – who bought all the buildings at the end of years '90 for 12 million of dollars and made him split in various units – the renowned American designer Tommy Hilfiger, along with some members of European royal families.

Each apartment is about 500 square meters, spread over 4 floors connected by private elevator and has 3 or 5 or 6 bedrooms, 4 bathrooms, private terrace surrounded by greenery. The interior layout is typical of the New York apartments of luxury with large open plan kitchen/living spaces bathed in natural light through the large floor to ceiling Windows with rectangular glasses. Interior design by New York studio IMG design focuses on codes such as simplicity and geometrical rigour, but without excess, which allows environments with understated elegance. In addition to the luxury apartment building offers spacious public areas and a magnificent hall embellished with splendid marble flooring, Walnut walls and vaulted ceilings decorated with silver leaf.

The property has everything it takes to become a luxurious family complex, or a sumptuous single family residence in the heart of sought after neighborhood of Lenox Hill, as well as representing a great investment opportunity. For winning it takes 29 million dollars as indicated by Stribling of New York City real estate agency handling the sale.
